THE BAGPIPER RULES

Play the ball down

Play stymies (can't stymie partner)

Concede putt allowed

If you are in a hole move the ball, no penalty

If you are near an obstacle that would damage the club, move the ball, no penalty

If you lose a ball or it is out of bounds, drop ball one-stroke penalty (no distance penalty)

These are all decisions by the player; it's an honorable game!

No Range Finders or Ball Marking (lifts only)

STYMIE RULES

In singles match play when one player's ball blocked the path of another player's ball on the green, but the two were not within six inches of each other, the obstructing ball was not lifted. This forced the player who was further away from the hole to either attempt to chip his ball over the obstructing ball or to putt around it.^[1] If his ball struck the opponent's ball, his next shot would have to be played from where his ball came to rest and his opponent, when it was his turn to play, had the choice to attempt his putt from his ball's original position or its new one. If the player's ball knocked the obstructing ball into the cup, his opponent was considered to have holed out on the previous shot.

Modifications

In 1920, the United States Golf Association tested a modified stymie rule for one year, allowing a stymied player to concede the opponent's next putt. The next change to the stymie rule came in 1938, when the USGA began a two-year trial in which an obstructing ball within 6 inches (15 cm) of the hole could be moved regardless of the distance between the balls. The USGA made this rule permanent in 1941. However, during this time, the Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St Andrews never modified their stymie rule.
